It is a singular circumstance that the deepest snows of this winter are all at the east of the Mississippi valley; while last winter the heavy snows were westward of the great valley. This winter the railway trains on the Central Pacific road are running unimpeded; last winter they were under snow blockades for part of it-if indeed to anything belongmore than half the winter. Now the trains on the Eastern roads are blockaded. The clerk of the weather has curious freaks and frolics in this great country. We hope when civil service heard all kinds of epithets opposite and the reverse applied to trumpets, and we petitive examinations may enable the country to get a more reliable commiscountry to get a more reliable commis-sioner in that department; one that trumpets reformers' voices is a stroke of sons who lost their lives, or were won't go off on such terrible busts.

And fore us, we are sure our teachers and now comes John Mitchell to wallop him school officers will find it an indispensable aid to them in their work, as it diswith the Irish-Protestant gad. The latter assailant has just appeared in the arena, and denounces Froude as a fraud; uable plans and suggestions for building school houses. Send to the publishdeclaring that he bears false witness against his neighbors in Ireland; proclaiming that in support of his statecites false and fraudulent historical doc uments, long known to be such. Among those documents were the "forty folio depositions," which Froude had quoted as if of undoubted veracity, stating that In the massacre of 1641, full 154,000 Protestants had been slaughtered in Ulster alone: when, as Mitchell shows, all Ulster did not contain more than 20,000 Protestants. In this manner "Mitchell on Fronde" becomes even more interest ing than the essays of Burke and Phillips on the unfortunate subject. Doubtless Froude will return to England with the conviction lurking in his mind that America is a hard road to travel.
